

Dear students:

Today we've been entrusted with solving a new case. We go to schools, as usual, as from experience we know that students always want to help us. In addition, you really become professionals solving any kind of enigma. Our case today is a forgetful dung beetle that has forgotten its scientific name and wants us to find it out. It's a particular insect because it carries a large umbrella with it, even when it isn't raining. Strange, right?

To find out its name we are going to propose a series of games or tasks. Once you perform them successfully you can get the clues that will help us solve the mystery.

To become part of our research team, we provide you with a filed researcher card and a field notebook where you'll collect data and write down the clues that will help to solve this case.

We also bring some beetle's letters that will make us get to know it better.

Do you want to help us solve this interesting case?

Thank you very much!

Sincerely,
Gastón and Gastona
